"Δὲν ἀκούεται οὐτ' ἓνα κύμα εἰς τὴν ἔρμη
ἀκρογιαλιά, Λὲς καὶ ἡ θάλασσα κοιμᾶται,
μὲς τῆς γῆς τὴν ἀγκαλιά."

Lyrics from the poem "Galini", Dionysios Solomos, that was written right next to Utopia while he was listening to the sound of the waves.

The cultural influence of Venice was considerable. The wealthy made a habit of sending their sons to Italy to be educated. Good examples are Dionysios Solomos, a native of Zakynthos and Greece's national poet, and Ugo Foscolo, also native of Zakynthos and a national Italian poet.

The most famous landmark of the island is the Navagio beach. It is a cove on the northwest shore, isolated by high cliffs and accessible only by boat. The beach and sea floor are made of white pebbles, and surrounded by turquoise waters. It is named after a shipwreck, which sunk on the shore around 1980.

1953: This was a very significant year for the island of Zakynthos and its inhabitants. A big earthquake struck at midday and a big fire burned down the historic town of Zakynthos. This is the main reason why there are no buildings left with the important Venetian architecture in Zakynthos town, as you might find in other Ionian islands.
